

CORPORATE MEMBERSHIP

Corporations understand the benefits of being actively involved in their communities. With a corporate membership in your local Kiwanis club, you can be a part of the decisions that affect your community — while developing an affiliation with a respected service organization.

How it works

To become a corporate member, your company registers with Kiwanis International as a member of your local Kiwanis club. A representative of your choosing will attend club functions, including meetings, fundraisers and service projects.

The representative is eligible to serve as a club officer and to attend conventions as a club delegate. Other features of corporate membership:

- If the representative changes jobs, another employee can be designated — without an additional fee.
- Your company has the choice of paying club dues or asking your representative to do so.
- There is no limit to the number of memberships a company can have in a club. However, each membership requires a specific person designated by the company.

The benefits

For the company's representative, corporate membership offers the same benefits that other Kiwanis members enjoy:

- Leadership skills development.
- Networking opportunities.
- Personal fulfillment.
- Connections with like-minded people.

The company can send other, non-designated employees to club meetings as guests. The designated representative can also invite fellow employees as guests. Either way, it's a great opportunity to give multiple employees access to the benefits of Kiwanis service.

For the company, of course, there's the connection with Kiwanis. As a corporate member of our organization, you become a corporate leader in your community — and an influence in making the world a better place for children.

Kiwanis[®]